

Article 4

The right to live is inherent to the human being. Its protection is guaranteed, in general, after the time of conception. The death penalty remains abolished. Each individual's physical and psychological integrity as well as his honour and reputation will be protected by the State. The law will regulate the freedom to dispose ones own body, but only for scientific or medical purposes.